

The Charming Night

ARTPOWER

Bar- Studio Kluchi

Designer
Peter Kostikov
Alevy Rabinovich
Anton Grechko

Location
Moscow, Russia

Area
300 m²

Photographer
Aleksey Kravtsov

The theme of modern interpretation of classical elements is also implemented in the small bar called "yumochkiya" (a jigger) and in the chill out area. Traditional materials used for finishing "yumochkiya" (a jigger) contrast with interpretation of how and where they are used, e.g. the bar ceiling is parqueted literary in the same way as floor while the lightning fittings above the tables are made of wood the shape of which replicates the shape of tables which creates the feeling of weightlessness and confusion of intensely space reflection.

Chill out is designed to similar principles. There is no surface boundary that is they are made of the same material-concrete slabs slopping on different levels. Sectional concrete slabs resemble classical Roman architecture. Some elements are exact replicas of fragments of some orders, cornices and friezes. The intervals between them are faced with steel metal strips.

Stair case was also changed dramatically, conventional parallel flights of steps were transformed into composite divided upward.

Lower part of dome to which a stair case is directed is shaped as huge lighting fitting which illuminates the under domespace. Lighting fittings are made of 600 sewer pipes of various diameters. Inside each of them a LED illumination is set.

